Father of Strangler's Victim at Inquest To-day Relates Circumstantially How Crime Was Committed, and Fixes Exact Time, Collapsed on the Stand.

Special to the Boston American.

READFIELD, Me., Aug. 23.—Just how pretty Mattie Hackett was found dying, how she was lifted into the house with the deadly strangling cord deeply imbedded in her throat, although she was still breathing, and how quicker action might have saved his daughter's life, were told graphically and dramatically to-day by Levi L. Hackett, father of the girl.

Twice during the telling he collapsed on the stand.

According to his story, the exact time of the murder is fixed at a few minutes before 8:10 o'clock; he heard the murderer run away through the bushes; he heard the preliminaries of the mysterious crime, and by action then might have prevented it. The story was one of absorbing interest, and hundreds of persons listened to it.

Coroner Morse of Augusta presided, and County Attorney Thomas Leigh conducted the examination of the witnesses. It was understood before the inquest began that it was to be a formal inquest entirely, and that certain evidence would not be brought out, pending the arrest on Friday of the murderer.

INQUEST IS PERPUNCTORY.

First Mr. Hackett described how he came home from working on the road at 7:15 o'clock on the evening of the murder, Thursday, and of how he went to his supper. Everybody was away from home except Mattie, the girl who was murdered, and she was reading a book. He "watched" her, and she prepared his supper.

Then Mr. Leigh asked the true story of the murder, and the father gave it in a plain, matter-of-fact way. He said that he had been looking for his daughter, and that he had found her in the kitchen, where she was sitting on the floor, with her head against the wall.

He said that he had found her in the kitchen, where she was sitting on the floor, with her head against the wall.

HOW MILLIONAIRE WOMAN AND WED DAUGHTER OF HIS FIRST LOVE

STEEL MAGNATE, WHEN A YOUTH, LOVED GOLDIE'S MOTHER; SHE PREFERRED ANOTHER.

PREFACE:

NEW YORK, Aug. 23.—Cinderella-like, pretty Goldie Mohr, from a humble birthplace, achieved millions. She was the path she took which she had to follow, despite a position, in that if the widow sought to break it or change its stipulations she could forfeit the part of the estate left to her.

Now the former show girl is determined to fight the will of the magnate for at least a child of the estate. Henry Collins is her attorney. He believes the will can be broken, despite a position, in that if the widow sought to break it or change its stipulations she could forfeit the part of the estate left to her.

CHAPTER I.

FOURTY years ago, in Allentown, Pa., Alma Wood attended the Academy, a seminary school. She was twenty years old then, handsome and was wealthy with a free purse. His father was then laying the foundation of millions which afterwards came into possession of her son.

Young Alma was popular and widely sought after. He led the grand march at the first dance, and she was his partner. There he met for the first time pretty Goldie Mohr, who was a daughter of a poor man, but she was pretty, very pretty. Alma danced with her several times during the evening.

After the dance he met her again several times. After a while his friendship for the pretty Miss Mohr grew into love. He was then a student at the University of Pennsylvania, and she was a student at the University of Pennsylvania.

CHAPTER II.

AFTER a while Wood kissed his variation and went away from Allentown, back to the paternal home of his father in Pittsburgh. He was the love of Mohr, the woman for whom he had lived on. Finally a daughter was born, a pretty little girl, who grew up and a slightly away from home.

This little girl was named Goldie Mohr. That is not her real name, but it is the name by which the girl has always been known. When Goldie was a year old, her father died, and she was left to the care of her mother and her grandmother.

about pink frocks, there grew up for her a love for the life of the little playmate. There was in the little girl's heart a passion which later was achieved. It was her ambition to marry a rich man. The humble home of the house painter and her pretty mother was not for her to stay.

"I shall marry a man worth millions," she told her father once. And would have little to do with her. Her eyes were set far ahead toward a goal which she has never in this day lost sight of.

CHAPTER III.

AMBITION has no play in a village, or a small city of the state of Allentown. When it came to pass that when Goldie Mohr had finished her schooling and had more than a share of her mother's beauty and charm, she came to New York. Then the world was a question to her, she knew nothing of it.

After a while in New York, her beauty, her shapeliness, improved themselves on her mind as much as in the room of the girl she had met. The material employment of her attractive personality toward the stage. She had a good singing voice, she had long and dark hair, and she had a good figure.

CHAPTER IV.

ONE night when Mr. Wood, now a millionaire, was in the city, he saw a girl who reminded him of Goldie Mohr. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her.

When the girl was asked to marry him, she refused. She was attracted to him, but she was not attracted to him. She was attracted to him, but she was not attracted to him. She was attracted to him, but she was not attracted to him.

CHAPTER V.

FOR months the millionaire tried to win the girl. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her. He was attracted to her, and he was attracted to her.

she would come of it. The daughter was perfectly willing at that time to let the father as he pleased.

At last, by urgent request of Mr. Wood, pretty Goldie Mohr resigned from the chorus of Weber & Fields.

"Why? asked the manager. "I expect to marry a millionaire," was the reply. She did marry him. In 1904 the aged man and the girl, then twenty-two years old, went to Yonkers together. FOR THE GIRL WHOSE VACATION COMES LATE
THERE IS KEENEST ENJOYMENT IN TRAMPING

What to Wear, What to Carry and
How to Plan for a Delightful
Outing Afoot on the Road

EARLY in your new Boston work-day you are passing your vacation in the freedom and beautiful rest of a tramp-tour through the country. This year walking late to be quite the fact. And now is just the time of year for the ideal vacation in the open air. With the golden breezes to fill the highways with the first touch of the coming warmth of spring and with the first faint air of the fall frost in the air, there comes the warning that the days of the Summer are fast closing. Now comes the days when exercise in the open air is more enjoyable and more healthful than at any other time of year.

Traveling and tramping have already taught women the joys of the open road, and soft is tramping the exhilaration of the walk in the open air. And with these have come a return of walking late after. Hundreds of women are beginning to appear in the pleasure.

After all, it is the one way of perfect freedom on a vacation. If you go to a place on anything but your feet you are taken so fast you are sure to miss a thousand delicate joys that are waiting for you by the way.

Walking is far easier than most people imagine. It only needs an interest in the trip, some confidence and a very little training. For a set out on an additional week's training is ample. It is not a bad plan to start off with the training on a walk by contrasting one's self with short distances in the first day.

Walking is with a healthy, normal exercise that one need not have fear of overdoing it. If one goes for the expansion is more healthful and natural than that of the tramping. It is the tramping rider after an over-exhaustion of the body.

There is no end and early to rest in a tramping tour.

Walking is with a healthy, normal exercise that one need not have fear of overdoing it. If one goes for the expansion is more healthful and natural than that of the tramping. It is the tramping rider after an over-exhaustion of the body.

There is no end and early to rest in a tramping tour.

Walking is far easier than most people imagine. It only needs an interest in the trip, some confidence and a very little training. For a set out on an additional week's training is ample. It is not a bad plan to start off with the training on a walk by contrasting one's self with short distances in the first day.

Some Ineligible Girls

- 1—The flirt and coquette.
- 2—The indifferent girl.
- 3—The too-easy girl.
- 4—The too-exacting girl.

HERE is one type of girl who will never be very popular with the men, and that is the girl who demands too much of her admirer.

She is never satisfied unless the man is displaying the most devoted devotion for the benefit of all who may care to see.

She expects him to be always at her beck and call, to have no other object in life than the gratification of her whims.

His duty toward her must supersede all other duties. Business is a secondary consideration. She must be first and foremost in everything.

Her mental attitude is, "If he wants me he must work for me." This is all she thinks about. No man cares to work with no encouragement.

ONE cannot thrive on a steady diet of selfishness and unreasonable demands.

This type of girl is never happy unless the man is spending money on her. In fact, she only values him in proportion to the amount he spends.

It makes no difference to her that he may be spending more than he can afford.

With open hands she is ready to take, taking more and more until the growing pile of debts behind him may tempt him on at any minute.

He doesn't dare stop, for he knows that if he does, she will leave him.

When the gifts and treats cease interest will instantly be lacking. Fortunately in most cases the lover's eyes are eventually opened to his lover's selfishness, but until they are he goes on blindly worshipping her idol, whose feet are indeed of clay.

If he is unfortunate enough to marry before he discovers her faults, he reaps the benefit of his shortsightedness in a life of misery, his entire life spent in the service of a selfish, unloving woman.

Occasional gift of candy, flowers or a book, to the theatre, etc., is all well and good, but it is the repetition of these things which causes the man to become tired.

The average young man has to work to keep up with such a girl. His day is long, and if he does his duty he is naturally exhausted.

He becomes interested in a girl and naturally wishes to spend as much time in her society as possible.

If her interest in him is sincere she will influence him to help him to succeed.

She means sensible hours, interest in his life and giving him a chance to show his worth.

ALL this the girl can help him to do, but not by insisting on his spending so much money on her.

Remember, girls, that the criticism of girls in general is merely due to a type.

Not a very attractive type, perhaps, but still one which we often see in our daily lives.

Don't be misled by this discussion of "types," for sooner or later we are all going to be "types."

For there is a golden girl whom we all know, and she is the one who is the most common type of all—the girl who is the most attractive.

She is the girl who knows how to do it, who knows how to do it, who knows how to do it.

She is the girl who knows how to do it, who knows how to do it, who knows how to do it.

She is the girl who knows how to do it, who knows how to do it, who knows how to do it.

MISS BESSIE NORTON IN HER ALPINE HELMET

THIS photograph shows the remarkable costume worn by a woman who braves the cold of the highest peak of the Alps at this season of the year. Miss Norton is the first woman to accomplish the ascent of Mount Blanc this year. Her actual ascent was made on the 15th of June and the return journey three and one-half hours. The climb was so intense that the breath of the wind made her feel as if she were in a furnace. She was the only woman of the party and led the way for the men.

Let Baby Sleep

ANYONE infant ought to spend the greater part of its time asleep. In fact, the two great calls of its life are sleeping and eating, and the second ought to be given more time than the first.

Never allow a baby to be moved from its bed. Remember that it is often good to let a baby sleep. It is often good to let a baby sleep.

What do you think? It is often good to let a baby sleep. It is often good to let a baby sleep.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: A young man whom I have deeply loved for some time has just told me that he is going to marry another girl. I am very sad and I don't know what to do.

USE COMMON SENSE IN DRESSING YOUR CHILDREN

CHILDREN who live to mix with other children should always be plainly dressed. It is a great unguessed fact that a child who is dressed in a showy and flashy manner will be the object of ridicule and scorn.

BE CHEERFUL AT MEALS

FAMILY meals are of the greatest importance in the household and should be a source of refreshment, rest and pleasant conversation. Children should be encouraged to be cheerful and to enjoy their meals.
